But, such as it is, Germany is believed to have her eye upon the spot, which has already undoubtedly played an important part in the development of her commerce. Since the island came into the possession of England it has been free of customs duties and the impetus which it gave to smuggling by affording facilities for the importation of contraband goods into Continental ports no doubt gave the death blow to the German protective system. Whether, however, England will allow it to pass from her hands is a question that cannot be answered so confidently as that relative to Gibraltar. So long as we can hold it, we undoubtedly shall do so, and the principal enemy to be dreaded is not Germany, but the force nature. The island a thousand years ago measured 120 miles in circumference. By the year 1800 the action of the sea on the soft, sandy soil of the lowlands had reduced its area to 45 mile round, and in 1649 it measured only four miles in circumference. Since then the rate of denude tion has been slower, owing to the height of the Sharp's alley, Cow-cross, whence it was purveyed remaining land, but none the less sure, and to the Metropolitan cats, with whose digestion the present time the superficial area of the island is not so much as one third that of the City (London proper, or about a third of a mile. This encroachment of the sea has taken place almost exclusively on the north-east side. It seems therefore that, unless the means taken for the arrest of this decay are rendered really effective. Heligoland will vanish from sight as completely as Earl Godwin's lands off the coast of Kent 80 years ago, and neither Germany nor any other Power will covet its possession. - Globe.

NOTHING ELSE TO LIVE FOR

There is a young man who is always melancholy. He was asked by a kindly-disposed man whether he could find no work.-"Sir, said he, "the only thing that slurs my happi ness is my appetite. Can I help it?" "No."-"The only thing that appeares m appetite is my food. Can I help it?"-"No certainly not."-"The only thing that procures me food is money. Can Thelpit?"-" Of course not; everybody has to buy food."-" The on! way for me to get money is to work. Can help it?"-" That is the best way to get it." -" But, sir," and here the tears came rolling down his cheek, "there is the rub. Work spoils my appetite, and I hav'n't anything else to-live for."

MISSED A CAR.

A good story is told of a gentleman well known in town in connection with a late visit of his to a drug store. There are several Carts in the city, however, and the given name of this particular one will not be revealed in this item for worlds. This Carr wanted some medicine for his family the other night after twelve o'clock, and visited a drug store to obtain it. The drug store was closed, and he rang the bell vigorously. The druggist at once put his head out of an upper window and inquired, sleepily:

"Mr. Carr," responded the gentleman at the bell.

"Missed a car? Well, what's that to me, confound you? Stop ringing that bell and go about your business, man!"

was lost to sight. The discomfitted Mr. Carr was lost in amazement for a time, but finally seized the bell and rang it frantically The druggist's head appeared at the window again. He was wide awake this time.

"Who's there now?" "Mr. Carr, I tell you!"

→ Who's there?"

"Why, --- your impudence! Who cares if you have! Get. out-of-that.-quick!--If you're drunk and have missed a car it's your own lookout. Don't touch that bell again! "But I tell you, you idiot, I'm Mr. ----

"Oh, Lord! Why didn't you say so before?" The window went down again and the druggist soon appeared at the door to explain volubly that he'd supposed he'd been aroused by some drunken fellow who wanted sympathy. Possibly he gave Mr. Carr something to pacify him. Druggists keep pacifications on draught.

Flours Castle The Count regarded her attentively, and his lamp became exhausted and the light interview with Isabella, and before the orange Hadda hen laughed.

Went out. He felt a strong conviction that buds bloomed again in the garden of the Do Ponguin "Nay, nay, my woman, I am no believer some unsech danger hovered near, and that Bivas mansion at San Pable, Isabella became Rhoda in these matters; but you, like all your race, which was suspicion became a certainty. No- a countess, and the happy wife of the man Viking are poor. I suppose; therefore, take this," thing remained now but to swait the attack, whose life she thad been instrumental in Wm Manson and he tossed her a peso, which she quickly and sell his life as dearly as possible. The saying Alta.
